

South China Morning Post

Call for internship applications

Cover Hong Kong

Our summer interns spend 12 exciting weeks as paid reporters, covering one of the world's most dynamic cities

The South China Morning Post is the most trusted newspaper in Hong Kong. Through our website, scmp.com, we also reach millions of readers around the world. Every year we hire bright, energetic summer interns and give them the opportunity of a lifetime. SCMP's interns report on everything from protest marches to escalator safety.

Who? Applicants should be third- or fourth-year university students or be university graduates. Their English should be excellent. Fluency in Cantonese or Putonghua is a plus. So are multi-media skills.

What? Would-be interns should send a cover letter explaining their interest in SCMP, their language skills and their 2015 summer interns.

journalism experience, if any. Applications should also include three published (in print or online) news or feature articles as well as a CV.

When? The deadline for overseas applications is January 18. The deadline for local applications (those from Hongkongers or students attending local universities) is February 18. Successful applicants will be notified in mid-March. Next summer's internships will run for 12 weeks—from June 6 to August 26, 2016.

Where? Email completed applications or additional questions to internship@scmp.com.
